Trump Remains Resilient in US Election Lead-up

Affective response of US population to Trump 2020: 1 Sept. 2020

President Trump remains a divisive yet resilient figure ahead of US elections.

Democratic candidate Joe Biden simply isn't well liked; indeedly he is actively disliked - party conventions have done little to impact the landscape.

Intense fear and horror dominate electorate emotions surrounding the incumbent. Similar fear drives engagement with the campaigns.

Importantly, overall affect for the president remains active and positive, in line with our observations prior to the 2016 election.

“Emotion is only impacting tech stocks”? Think again!

Earth.ai analyses the top 100 Nasdaq and S&P stocks daily. It identifies the emotions, trends and new ideas that influence stock prices, to deliver fresh insights.

Many stocks on occasion trade as much on emotion as on financial fundamentals. The alpha this understanding can contribute to a portfolio strategy can be significant.

The table demonstrates Earth.ai's trade performance for 2020Q3 to date for some key US equities. Performance is good - and in line with our overall history. We've demonstrated strong hit rates over many years.

What the Market Really Thinks of ESG Investing

Our analysis shows that momentum behind ESG (Environmental, Social & Governance) based investing in the US is being hindered by despair, discouragement, resignation and defeatism.

This is reflected in the lukewarm engagement with the category. ESG and the investment community is not a marriage of love. Rather, they shuffle reluctantly to the altar. There are clear actions that ESG-based investments can take to “get to the church on time”.

Interestingly, BLM-focussed Investing has rapidly established itself as being of comparable importance, but with far greater momentum.

Affective response in the US to ESG investing: 24 August
